T t Latin and Engliſh, whereof the former took its figure without any variation from the Greek capital, the latter, with a very ſmall difference, from the leſſer Greek character of moſt common uſe. They have indeed another ſmall t, but rejected by the Latins, in this form ϛ, which ſeems rather ornamental than neceſſary, being chiefly uſed in conjunction with the other ſmall τ. And as the Latins from the Greeks, ſo the Greeks borrowed theirs from the antient Hebrew, namely the Samaritan character of the ſame form; ſave that the tranſverſe plank lay not quite on the top of the erect ſtulp, but acroſs it a little lower, thus, †: which very form is retained ſtill in the ſmaller form of the Latin, and other cognate languages; in which figure alſo it was worn on the foreheads of the primitive Chriſtians. This letter is called by the Hebrews תו tau, which ſignifieth an extremity or bound, becauſe it is the laſt in their alphabet, as alſo the laſt conſonant in the Cadmean, and indeed properly the laſt in the more modern Greek; for φ and χ, which follow, are not properly letters, but notes expreſſive of two letters, and of no uſe in the times of the firſt alphabet, the former being then writ by ΠΗ or ΒΗ, the latter by ΚΗ or ΓΗ; which may alſo be ſaid of ψ, the compendiary note of ΠΣ, ΒΣ, and ΦΣ. In the Latin alphabet only x and z ſtand after it, the former an abbreviature of ΚΣ, ΓΣ, or ΧΣ; the latter of ΤΣ, ΔΣ, or ΘΣ, as will be ſhewed more fully in the diſſertation upon thoſe two letters. To proceed; this letter hath the firſt place in the third rank of the mutes, which admit of changes into, and perform mutual offices for, one another. Theſe changes are indeed moſt frequent in the ſame rank, becauſe neareſt in ſound to each other. Ex. gr. in the firſt rank p is only a ſofter b, and b an harder p, as in ſcribo, ſcripſi, ſcriptum; nubo, nupſi, nuptum: in the ſecond order c a ſofter g, and g an harder c, as in tego, tecſi, tectum; jungo, juncſi, junctum; which changes are plainly made only for the better ſound, the harder mute before a vowel paſſing into the ſofter before a conſonant; as is likewiſe done in the firſt and ſecond conjugation of the Greeks, as in λείβω, λείπσω, λέγω, λέκσω. In this third order, indeed, theſe changes in forming tenſes are not frequent in either of theſe languages, but in derivations of Latin words from Greek ſuch a reciprocation is very common; thus, as from βατῶ and κάτω are derived vado and cado, ſo vice verſâ from ἔνδον and μῦδος are made intus and mutus. The ſame is obſerved in Latin derivatives from primitives of the ſame: thus, as from madeo and video are made matula and vitrum; and as in compoſition, for the more eaſy ſound, d before t is conſtantly changed into t, as in attendo, attenuo, and their derivatives; ſo alſo from mentior and quatuor come mendax and quadra: and we may add, that our Engliſh tongue ſometimes ſoftens the Latin d into this letter, as in at, it, what, from ad, id, quid. But as all the orders have a mutual commerce with one another, this letter, though leſs frequently, and her ſiſters of the firſt and ſecond order, correſpond: for as terebra is from τέρετρον, ſo tuſſis from βήσσω, as proceres from πρότεροι, ſo beſtia from βόσκημα. Nor do theſe mutual offices between this mute and the ſiſterhood, hinder her good correſpondence with two of the liquids, l and n. For as mitis is from μείλιχος, ſo volo, are, from πετάω, πετῶ; as clitello from κλίνω, ſo pinus from πίτυς.

And there is the ſame agreement between this letter and the ſolitary ſ in Latin words of Greek extraction, where the civilities are only mutual; for as nauſea is from ναυτία, ſo is myrtus from μυρσίνη; but in words purely Greek, t ſo far intruded into the property of her neighbour ſ, that ſhe was forced to bring her writ of ejectment before the tribunal of the vowels, with a deſign to hang T on her own gibbet, as Lucian jocoſely ſays; but being nonſuited by the prevailing power of the Athenian eloquence, meditated revenge, and made repriſals by the help of a barbarous nation, who, though they left t in poſſeſſion, gave her power away to ſ, in more inſtances, both in her own and the conquered Roman dominions, than ſhe could pretend her neighbour had invaded her right, viz. that whereever t came before the third vowel, another vowel following, ſ, under very few reſtrictions, ſhould take her power. And the grammarians, who ought to have oppoſed this uſurpation, confirmed it; and well it was for the Greek tongue, that the Goths underſtood nothing of it, and the grammarians of that time very little; for how abſurd had it been to have read αἰσία, ὠσίον, for αἰτία, ὠτίον, &c. which would ſeem equally abſurd in Latin, if we did not ſubmit to a barbarous preſcription. But to proceed; this mute admits after it in the beginning of pure Latin words of the liquids very ſeldom any other but r. The antients indeed in a few words beginning with l, prefixed ſt, as in ſtlites, ſtlocum, for lites, locum, &c. which now is obſolete. But in Greek words not only l, but m follow t, as in Tlepolemus, tmeſis. In the beginning it takes before it in Greek words c and p, as in Cteſippus, Ptelon; as alſo in the middle of Latin words in different ſyllables, as in factus, captus, as not only the dividing ſuch words requires, but reaſon, for fac and cap are radical, but tus ſervile termniations. V, v, the twentieth letter in the Latin alphabet, anſwers to the ſixth Hebrew letter ו, and being conformable to that in power, is both a vowel and conſonant; but as to its figure, it was, A.C. 306, or thereabout, thus varied, V, v, u, ʋ, according to Dr. Bernard, in his Literature of the learned world. In the Hebrew, indeed, the vowel points determine its ſound; for they being under it make it a conſonant, as in וָו וְלֹא וַיֵּשֶׁב vau, velo, viſhab; but a vowel when over it, as in יוֹם; or in the middle, as in וּבְנֵי ubene. The Greeks admit only this latter uſe; as alſo our Saxon anceſtors, who commonly ſubſtitute f in the place of v, as in ꝼiꝼ, ꞅeoꝼan, five, ſeoven, as we find in very antient manuſcripts; and ſometimes u, as Leui Levi; which notwithſtanding they ſounded ſuch words as we do now, otherwiſe no change of the figure had been made in after times. But though they gave this letter no place in their alphabet, they admitted it among their numerals; herein imitating the Greeks, who had made it a numeral only, calling it Βαῦ ἐπίσημον. To begin with the conſonant: As to the figure, it is by ſome thought to be made from the Greek Υ, by cutting off the ſhank; though the great Scaliger ſuppoſed this was rather made from that, by adding the ſtem: but it ſeems plain, the reaſon for this ſuppoſition, was his aſcribing to the Farneſian monument an higher antiquity than he ought. As to his Proof from ATΓVCTOC being found on a Greek coin, it is very weak; becauſe all antiquaries know, that it was not unuſual for the Greeks, after they came under the Roman power, to mix Latin letters among their own in coins and inſcriptions, eſpecially in Latin words. Marius Victorinus alſo is againſt him, and Auſonius expreſly ſaith, Cecropius ignota viris ferale ſonans V. But though it be true that the Greeks had not the letter, yet it is plain that they, at leaſt the Æolians, had the Name, and gave it the ſame place as a numeral in their units, viz. 6, as it held in the mother alphabet, calling it Βαῦ ἐπίσημον, as likewiſe Κόππα (90) in their tens, and Σὰν πῖ (900) in their hundreds; being the only three Hebrew letters, צ, ק, ו, which they had no occaſion for in their alphabet. Nor had they the name only, but the form alſo from the Hebrew ו, turning it to the right, and bowing its body, ſo that its appearance was ſomewhat like the contracted mark ϛ, which therefore is now uſed for it. To proceed, from the name and figure, which are only accidents, to its power, which is the eſſence of a letter: As it is now pronounced, I think corruptly, it is a mute of the firſt rank, being of a middle ſound between b and f, harder than the former, and ſofter than the latter, aſpirating B, as Φ doth Π; and according to Priſcian and Donatus, is no other than the Æolian digamma. But if digamma be the Latin F, as they will have it, and a different power make a different letter, as ſurely it doth, F and V are two different ſounds, and conſequently different letters. This is plain from our own tongue, for we neither ſound nor write knifes, or lifes, though we do knife and life. I mean, as now pronounced; for it is very likely that before a vowel in the ſame ſyllable, both in the primitive and derivative tongues, it had the ſound of our w in the ſame poſition, as in wall, wen, wine, worm, from vallum, vena, vinum, vermis, Vid. Scal. Not. ad Euſeb. & Lipſ. de L.L. pronunciatione. Yea, in Latin words, after g, q, and ſ, we give it the ſound of w; as in lingva, ſeqvor, ſvadeo, where v is melted indeed into the vowel following, but ſtrengthens the ſound. That it is not purely a vowel, its reſolution into a vowel, frequently made by the poets, ſeems to evince; as in ſoluit, Catull. ſylüæ, Hor. This conſonant preceds any vowel in the beginning, middle, or end of words. It is eaſily changed into its ſiſter mutes, p and b: for as from ovis opilio, dubius qu. duvius; ſo from verpus vervex, from γίλβος gilvus. Thus much may ſuffice for the name, figure, and ſound of the conſonant, in the antient Latin. We proceed to the ſound of the vowel, as now diſtinct from the conſonant, both in figure and power. The inconvenience of expreſſing two different ſounds by the ſame letter, was obſerved by Claudius Cæſar, who endeavoured to remove it, by introducing Ⅎ the Æolian digamma inſtead of it; which in public records obtained a while. But a very uſeful, though late, invention has applied an effectual remedy, by taking from the former the vocal, and from the latter the conſonant power; ſo that now U is a vowel when it maketh a ſyllable alone, or cometh before a conſonant in the ſame ſyllable: and as ſuch hath a mutual intercourſe with all the vowels. For as from κύλιξ calix, from μυδάω madeo; ſo from κάπαλος capulus, from κραιπάλη crapula: as from ἴβυξ ibex, from ἑκυρὸς ſocer; ſo from νέφος nubes, from σκόπελος ſcopulus. As from φύω fio, from ςύφω ſtipo; ſo from γλία gluten, from χάρις carus: as from ἄγκυρα anchora, from νὺξ nox; ſo from φῶρ fur, from ἀμοργὴ amurca. As ſolvit diſſolved is ſoluit, ſilva ſilua; ſo nervus from νεῦρον. Nor is it only related to the vowels, but to the diphthongs alſo. Thus fuſcus from φαιὸς, curro from καίρω, lagæna comes from λάγυνον, à [illegible] ſextarius. By this letter alſo ſometimes the Greek ȣ is expreſſed in Latin, as duplus from διπλȣ̃ς, Urania from Ουρανία, u being equipollent in ſound to that diphthong, as Terentianus Scaurus has obſerved, ſaying, Ου literis noſtris vacat, quod hunc V compleat ſatis ſonum; which ſeems rather adapted to the vowel, than the conſonant ſound of this letter, according to the modern pronunciation. But if we admit, as was before hinted, that V in Latin was ſounded as our W, the difference in ſound is not ſo great. In gerunds and participles, this vowel was by the antients ſubſtituted for e; as, ad faciundum; mos gerundus eſt; as alſo in many adjectives of the ſuperlative degree, this cuſtom generally obtained till C. Ceſar's time, when they firſt began to write by the middle vowel, optimus, maximus, for optumus, maxumus, as we learn from Fabius, l. 1, 7. Significant notes with the initial V. V. A. X x Latin, Ξ ξ Greek. This letter, though both in the alphabetical ſeries and as a numeral, it anſwer to the Hebrew ס denoting ſixty in that tongue, as this doth in Greek, yet undoubtedly in power comes nearer the harder ſound of ש ſchin, which probably ſtood moſt antiently in this place, till it was uſurped by the introduction of the ſecundary ס. Neither hath it only the power, but the form of ש alſo ; being made by erecting the plane or flat, and turning it to the right, to comply with the weſtern way of writing. The Hebrews call it ſchin, i. e. a tooth, from its dental figure ; and if you proſtrate ξ thus ω, you will perfectly ſee the teeth of a ſaw. The name Ξῖ alſo, as well as the power and ſound, is taken from ſchin, by removing the laſt conſonant, analogically to what the Greeks did in adopting other letters, or rather by anaſtrophe, cs for ſc. For as from mem and nun are made my, ny, ſo from ſchin is made xî. The Latin letter takes its power, and name indeed, from the Greek ; but its form is the ſame with the capital Greek Χ Chi, and is ſometimes reſolved into it, as in ἀκρόνυκος, qu. ἀκρὴ νύξ ; and from future tenſes in ξω, and formed preter tenſes in χα, as πλέξω πέπλεχα, λέξω λέλεχα : and that into this ; the Attics ſaying διξὰ and τριξά, for δίχα and τρίχα. It is a double conſonant, compounded of the ſecond order of the mutes κ, γ, χ, and the formative σ ; as in πλέκω, πλέξω ; λέγω, λέξω ; ἔχω, ἕξω. The antient Attics long uſed the ſingle letters, writing πλέκσω, λέγσω, ἔχσω : and the antient Æolians never uſed this conjunction, as neither did the Romans univerſally : for Nigidius Figulus, who, next to Varro, was in greateſt reputation for his learning, refuſed to uſe it all, as Victorinus acquainteth us. And Fabius, Inſt. Or. I, 4. ſaith, they might have been without it. For all words might have been written as we find apecs, gregs. And Cicero telleth us, it was left out in many words, to give them an eaſier ſound ; as in ala, velum, &c. for axilla, vexillum, &c. The later Athenians, on the other hand, uſed ξ inſtead of σ, eſpecially in the beginning of words, as tempering the ſerpentine hiſs of σ, which grated upon their ears, as I have ſhewn in my diſſertation on that letter. And the Dorians alſo imitated them in the end of words ; as in ὄρνιξ for ὄρνις, κλάξ for κλείς. This alſo they did in the futures, and firſt aoriſts of verbs baryton of the fourth conjugation ; as in καθίξω, ἐκάθιξα, for καθίσω, ἐκάθισα, &c. On the other hand, the Latins ſometimes ſubſtituted this letter for the Greek final ς, writing piſtrix and Ajax for πίστρις and Αἴας. This double letter in declining nouns, often loſeth its s ; as in fax, facis ; rex, regis ; crux, crucis. In numerals it expreſſeth ten, whence in old Roman manuſcripts it is uſed for denarius, and as ſuch ſeems to be made of V and Λ joined, i. e. twice five. X. P. Decem pondo, or decem pedes ; XV. Decemvir.

Υ υ, a Greek vowel, the figure whereof Palamedes is ſaid to have taken from the flight of cranes, according to Philoſtratus; but ſurely this muſt be a miſtake as to Palamedes, becauſe we find it in the Sigean monument ſtill in being, graven when the Greeks had only the ſixteen letters which Cadmus brought into Greece. The two horns, as the old epigram calleth them, or branches, as Perſius, were choſen by Pythagoras to demonſtrate the eaſy deſcent to vice on the left, and the difficult aſcent to virtue on the right; from whence it is called his letter. The antient figure plainly ſhews, that the Latin V was taken from it, being exactly the ſame with it in figure. And perhaps V was antiently by the Latins ſubſtituted for it, as we ſee in many words; as in cubus, duo, mus, ſus, ruo, &c. from κύβος, δύω, &c. and this they did antiently in words that were afterwards writ by the y, as in Muſia, Suria, for Myſia, Syria: but the inſtances in theſe words are fewer. It is certain the Latin V had in many words a deeper ſound than the Greek V, and therefore not the ſame letter, but nearer to their ου; foraſmuch as Βροῦτος, Ἰούνιος, were writ by the Greeks for Brutus, Junius: yea the antient Latins writ ou for u long, as in loumen, joure, for lumen, jure. The Latins have no capital of this letter, becauſe they do not wánt it: for the Greeks aſpirate all words beginning with υ; but the Romans owning an aſpiration for a letter, as indeed it is, and always was with them, prefix h before ſuch words as they take, or borrow from them, and therefore are all marſhalled under it. But the ſmaller y they have from the Greek Υ, by obliquating its ſtem, and uſe it in the middle and end of words, as in Cayſter, corymbus; or end, as onyx, martyr. Our mother tongue, in the beginning of words and ſyllables, admits it as a conſonant, as in yarn, yeſt, yoke, unyoked, but otherwiſe as a vowel.

Ζ ζ Greek; Z z when borrowed by the Latins to expreſs Greek words; ז Hebrew. This letter is called a double conſonant, whereof the Greeks have three, Ξ, Ψ, and Ζ: the two former were of later invention, but this ſtood in the antient alphabet, as appears by the citation of Pliny, Lib. VII, c. 56, out of Ariſtotle, notwithſtanding the corrupt reading even in the beſt edition of Pliny, where Ξ is put for Ζ, and Ζ for Ξ, as the learned Salmaſius obſerved, and after him the great Spanhemius. This miſtake ſeems purely to have been occaſioned by the Roman librarians, who miſtook the one for the other. The antient figure of this letter was ⵂ, and by obliquating the perpendicular hath its preſent form. Its ſound, now unknown, was between the Phenician zain and the Latin G; which, though late, took its original from thence. Hence G is ſometimes changed into it, as in ὀλίζον, which the Ionians uſed for ὀλίγον; and φύζω for φύγω. So the Dorians writ ζεύω for γεύω. The Latins alſo uſed indifferently zingiber or gingiber, for the Arabian word writ by the Greeks ζιγγίβερι. That this letter had a very ſweet ſound, is certain from the authority of Dion. Halicarnaſſus, Περὶ συνθέσεως ὀνομάτων. And Fabius ſuppoſed that the Romans could never arrive at the ſweetneſs of the Greek elocution, becauſe it wanted y and z, which he calls the ſweeteſt of all their letters, Inſt. Or. XII, c. 10. For which reaſon, one would think it could not have the ſound of a double conſonant. For if it were pronounced as the Æolians and Dorians writ δσ, or σδ, as in δσυγὸς for ζυγὸς, δσεὺς or σδεὺς for ζεὺς, τράπεσδα for τράπεζα, &c. it muſt be very hard, eſpecially when a conſonant followed, as ζμερδνὸς, ſmilaces. Its Hebrew mother ז, is certainly a ſingle conſonant, as alſo in our Engliſh tongue, where we ſometimes join two of them together, as muzzle, puzzle, &c. The Latins likewiſe often put d or g for this letter, as in nidor, from κνίζα; harpago, from ἁρπάζω. The Greeks change it alſo into σ, as in the firſt future tenſe of the fourth conjugation; or rather exclude it before the formative σ, as in σώζω, σώσω. The Latins indeed often put ſſ for it, as in patriſſo, pitiſſo, from πατρίζω, πιτίζω: and ſometimes alſo ſubſtitute j, as being near in ſound to g, as in jugum, from ζυγὸς. In Greek numerals it noteth VII, though it be only the ſixth letter, becauſe ϛ is interpoſed in the numerical alphabet.

Achelōus, oï. m. A famous river of Epire in Greece, riſing out of mount Pindus, and dividing Ætolia from Acarnania ; hod. Pachicolmo. The poets give it a perſon, and ſay he was the ſon of Oceanus and Tethys ; or of the Sun and Earth, as ſome ſay, whom Hercules engaged in ſingle combat for Deianira, daughter to the king of Calydonia, to whom both had pretenſions, and conquered him, though he changed himſelf firſt into a ſerpent, then into a bull ; in which form having loſt one of his horns, he was obliged to compound for it by giving Hercules the horn of plenty (Vid. Amalthæa) for it, at laſt changed himſelf into a river. The meaning of the fable is, that this was a great river, therefore fitly called the ſon of Oceanus. That it had many turnings and windings, therefore fitly expreſs'd by a ſerpent. The roaring noiſe which it maketh when it overfloweth its banks, and whereby the adjacent fields become fruitful, anſwer well to the labours and roaring of a bull ; under which figure therefore the poets frequently deſcribe rivers. The two ſtreams, or channels which it had, are the two horns in the fiction ; one of which branches, being dammed up by Hercules to prevent its ſpoiling the country, is deſcribed by the cutting off one horn ; and the fruitfulneſs which thereupon ſucceeded, is the fabulous horn of plenty, Mythol.

Achĕmon vel Achmon, is. m. *One of the Cercopes, brother to Paſſalus, both very affronting to every body they met. ['Αμάλθεια, ab ἀμαλθεύω, multiplico, nutrio] The nurſe of Jupiter. Meliſſus king of Crete had two daughters, Amalthea and Meliſſa, who fed Jupiter when a child, with goats milk and honey. Some ſay, that the name of the goat was Amalthea, and feign, that when ſhe was dead Jupiter flead her, and made his Ægis of her ſkin, from which he had the name of 'Αιγίοχος. Jupiter for her good ſervices afterward made her a ſtar, and gave one of her horns to his two nurſes, when he was come of age; imparting to it this virtue, that the horn ſhould ſupply every thing they wiſhed for. Ovid ſays, that Amalthea was the nymph who nurſed him, and that the goat by accident breaking off her horn againſt a tree, ſhe filled it with flowers and fruits, and put it to Jupiter's mouth; for which he turned her into a ſtar, and honoured the horn with the name of Plenty. 'Αμαλθείας κέρας, Prov. Pleno copia cornu, Hor. Epiſt. 1, 12, 29. though Ovid applieth that too to the horn of Achelous, which Hercules broke off. It is remarkable, that the ſeptuagint have tranſlated קרןהפוך Job's youngeſt daughter's name by 'Αμαλθείας κέρας. Some alſo gave their books of miſcellanies this title, of which number was Phocion the peripatetic.

Ammienſes, ium. m. pl. A people of Portugal, between Elvas and the river Tagus, Plin. 4, 22. hod. Portalegre, Hard.

Ammon, is. m. A name of Jupiter whoſe temple was in the deſerts of Libya, for which reaſon ſome have derived it from Ἄμμος, arena; but the name not being Greek, but purely Egyptian, as Plutarch, as well as Herodotus in Euterpe affirm, it ſeemeth more probable to derive it from חמה the ſun, under which name Macrobius hath ſhewn Jupiter to be worſhipped. This is farther confirmed by the manner of his worſhip, which was under the form of a ram, whence he is ſtiled corniger. For the word קרן, ſignifieth both an horn and a ray of light. His oracle was in reputation in the time of Alexander the Great, but began to be neglected in the reign of Tiberius, as Strabo, who then lived, telleth us, and more in the time of Trajan, as we learn from Plutarch's treatiſe of oracles, and more and more deſpiſed as the light of the goſpel ſhined clearer.

Ammonia, æ. f. (1) Juno worſhipped by the Greeks under that name. (2) The midland part of Libya. (3) The whole country ſo called. (1) Pauſ. in Eleis. (2) Steph. (3) Steph.

Amphimedon, tis. m. A certain Libyan, who fighting againſt Perſeus in the court of king Cepheus was by him ſlain. (2) The ſon of Melantheus, one of Penelope's ſuiters, and ſlain by her ſon Telemachus. (1) Ov. Met. 5, 75. (2) Hom. Odyſſ. χ, 284.

Amphinŏme, es. f. [ex ἀμφὶ, circum, & νομὴ, paſcuum] (1) The name of a nymph. (2) Jaſon's mother, who ſlew herſelf in her ſon's abſence. (1) Hom. Il. σ, 44. (2) Nat. Com. 6, 7.

Amphinŏmus, i. m. A Sicilian, who, together with Anapus his brother, when the city Catana and other neighbouring places were ſet on fire by an eruption from mount Ætna, carried their parents on their ſhoulders, and by their own danger ſawed their lives, Val. Max. 5, 4. V. & Sil. Ital. 14, 197.

Amphion, is. m. The ſon of Jupiter by Antiope the daughter of Nyćteus, who was raviſhed by Epaphus, as Hygin, or Epopeus, as Pauſan in Corinthiacis calleth him; and therefore divorced from her huſband Lycus. But afterwards being with child by Jupiter, ſhe was ſuſpected by Dirce, whom Lycus had married, to be ſtill familiar with her huſband, who therefore ordered her to be caſt into priſon; from whence ſhe was delivered by Jupiter, and fled into the mountain Citheron; and there, in a place where two ways meet, brought forth twins, which were educated by the ſhepherds as their own. They called one of them Zethus, ἀπὸ τοῦ ζητεῖν τόπον, and this other Amphion, ὅτι ἐν διόδῳ ἡ μήτηρ αὐτὸν ἔτεκεν. When they were grown up, and underſtood the injuries done by Dirce to their mother, they tied her to the tail of a mad bull, which dragged her on the cragged rocks, till Bacchus pitying her, turned her into a mountain of the ſame name. Amphion became an excellent muſician, having been preſented with a lute by Mercury, on which he played ſo ſweetly, that he brought the ſtones together wherewith the tower of Thebes was built, Hor. A. Poet. 394. & Sil. 11, 445. By thus receiving a lute from Mercury is meant, that he was a very eloquent man; and by his bringing the ſtones together, that he perſuaded the rude and barbarous people to join together into one body, and purſue one common intereſt, building themſelves a city, wherein to live together under certain laws agreed upon by common conſent, and fortifying a tower as a defence againſt their enemies.

Amphipŏlis, is. f. (1) A city of Macedon, in the confines of Thrace. It was formerly called Urbs Martis, and Septem viæ. The modern Greeks call it Chriſtopolis, and the Turks Embola. (2) A city of Syria near Euphrates, built by Seleucus. (1) Plin. 4, 10. (2) Steph.

Amulius, ii. m. (1) The ſon of Proca, and brother of Numitor. He deprived his elder brother Numitor of his kingdom, killed his ſon Lauſus, and made his daughter Rhea Sylvia, a veſtal virgin, that ſhe might have no iſſue. But a ſoldier having got her with child (Mars they ſay, to hide the diſgrace) ſhe bore two twins, Romulus and Remus, who when they were grown up reſtored their grandfather Numitor to his kingdom. (2) A painter of this name. (1) Vid. Liv. 1, 3. (2) Plin. 35, 10.

Amuſitus, i. m. A prince of the Lacetani, Liv. 21, 62.

Ămyclæ, arum, f. pl. (1) A city of Laconia, the birth-place of Caſtor and Pollux, who are called Amyclæi fratres, Stat. 7, 413. It had its name from Amyclus the ſon of Lacedæmon. Here was a temple dedicated to Apollo; hinc, Amyclæ Apollineæ, Stat. 4, 223. (2) A city of Italy between Cajeta and Taracina, built by the companions of Caſtor and Pollux. The people of this city being often frighted with falſe reports of an invaſion, made a law that none ſhould mention it for the future. At length the enemy came indeed, and ſurprized them unprovided. Anacharſis, is. m. A Scythian philoſopher contemporary with Solon, whoſe character Cicero hath drawn up in four words, Sobrius, continens, abſtinens, temperans, Tuſc. 5, 32. He ſaid laws were like ſpiders webs, which catch the ſmall flies, but that waſps and hornets break through them. That the body was the inſtrument of the ſoul, and the ſoul of God. He invented the anchor, as ſome ſay, and alſo the potters wheel, as Pliny, Euphorus, and others ſay. But it will be no detraction from him as a philoſopher, to diſbelieve this account of mechaniſm, ſince Homer who lived before him ſpeaketh of it as well known in his time, Il. σ, 600. He was the only philoſopher of his nation, whence the proverb Anacharſis inter Scythas, of a nonpareil, or noneſuch. At length he was ſhot by his brother, king of that place, for endeavouring to bring in the Athenian laws, Laert.

Anacreon, tis. m. A lyric poet, whoſe life, as well as poems, which are ſtill extant, was very laſcivious. He was of Teos, a city of Ionia, or, as others, of Teium, a city of Paphlagonia. However that be, he was in great reſpect with Polycrates the tyrant of Samos, with whoſe boy Smeridas he was in love, as likewiſe with Bathyllus another Samian boy, whom he courteth in his poems in two odes, though that he writ more is certain from Horace, who ſaith perſæpe cavâ teſtudine flavit amorem, Epod. 16. He was ill repaid by Bacchus for the fine things he had writ of him, being choaked with a grape ſtone.

His father Amilcar, when he was a boy, made him ſwear at the altar, that when he was grown up he would make war with the Romans, and never make any peace with them, Liv. 21, 1. & Sil. 1, 99. Accordingly when he was of age, he paſſed over into Spain, beat the Gauls at the river Rhoſne, then marched his army over the Alps, vanquiſhed Sempronius the Roman conſul at Trebia, routed the conſul Flaminius at Traſimene, and though worſted a little by the conduct of Q. Fab. Maximus, he recovered new courage, and fought with the two conſuls Paulus Æmilius and Terentius Varro, and intirely defeated them, 40000 foot, and 2700 horſe falling in that field, Liv. 22, 49. and ſent a buſhel of equeſtrian rings, as Livy writeth, ſome ſay three buſhels and a half, Liv. 23, 12. Florus 2, 6. ſaith two buſhels, and had he marched directly to Rome, as he was adviſed, it is probable there had been an end of the Roman name. But, happily for Rome, he lead his troops to Capua, where they were ſo beſotted with the rich wines of Italy, as never to be under any command afterwards. At length being overcome by the politic conduct of Fabius Maximus, he fled to Bithynia, and ended his life by a doſe of poiſon, which for that purpoſe he had reſerved in a ring. M. Antonius, The name of many great Romans. Their family they derive from Antius the ſon of Hercules. (1) M. Antonius, an eloquent orator, ſlain with many other great men by the Marian faction. He had two ſons, Marcus and Caius, the former whereof was a very profligate man. The latter commanding ſome troops of Sylla's horſe, plundered many places in Greece. He was ſurnamed Hybrida. (2) Marcus Antonius, ſon of the former of theſe, and grandſon to the orator, was the fomenter of the civil war. For being tribune, he left the city privately, and fled into Gaul to Ceſar. He invaded the province of Brutus, and by the perſuaſion of Tully the ſenate voted him an enemy to the republic. He was beaten by the two conſuls Hirtius and Panſa, and young Ceſar; but long after he joined in a league with Octavius and Lepidus, and ſo their government was called a triumvirate. Immediately upon this he vanquiſhed the forces of Brutus and Caſſius at Philippi in Macedon. He divorced his wife Fulvia, to marry Octavia ſiſter to Octavius. For the love he bore to Cleopatra queen of Egypt, he ſlighted her alſo, which Octavius reſenting made war upon him, overcame him in a ſea fight at Actium, and forced him to flee to Alexandria, where, being beſieged by Ceſar, in deſpair he fell on his own ſword. (1) Vid. Val. Max. 9, 2. & Luc. 2, 122, & ſeq. (2) Plin. 15, 1.

Julius Antonius, The ſon of Marcus. He was conſul with Paulus Fab. Maximus. To this man Horace addreſſeth his ſecond ode of the fourth book. His notorious incontinence with Julia, the daughter of Auguſtus, he revenged on himſelf with his own hand, as Paterculus, 2, 100. telleth us. But that it was by the command of Auguſtus we learn from Tacitus, Ann. 4, 44, 4.

Antonius Gnipho. He was of Gaul, but came to Rome and taught rhetoric and poetry in the houſe of Julius Ceſar, when yet a boy. His ſchool was frequented by Tully and other famous men. He ſet no price on his pains, and therefore his ſcholars were more liberal to him. He lived 50 years, Suet. de Illuſt. Gramm. 7.

Ceres miſſing her, and not knowing what was become of her, lighted torches on mount Ætna (which, they ſay, hath burnt ever ſince) and ſought for her all the world over; in her travels ſhe came to king Eleuſius, and undertook the tuition of his ſon Triptolemus. When he was come to age, ſhe provided him a chariot drawn with winged dragons, that he might travel through the world, and teach people huſbandry, who lived before on acorns, and other natural productions of the earth. Afterward hearing that her daughter was carried away by Pluto, ſhe went to Jupiter, and complained to him of the injury done her. Jupiter granted that ſhe ſhould return back, upon condition ſhe had taſted nothing in hell whilſt ſhe was there; but it being proved by the witneſs of Aſcalaphus, that ſhe had eaten ſome of a pomgranate, as ſhe walked in Pluto's orchard, all hope of return vaniſhed; wherefore, in revenge, ſhe turned Aſcalaphus into an owl. At length Jupiter, to eaſe his ſiſter's grief, granted that her daughter ſhould live half the year below with her huſband, and the other half with the gods above, Hygin. fab. 147, 274. Ceres is alſo taken for the Moon, as Liber, i. e. Bacchus, is for the Sun, *Virg. Cicero, ōnis. m. Mark Tully Cicero, father of the Latin eloquence, the greateſt orator that ever the Roman ſtate bred, or imployed. He was born at a mean town in Italy called Arpium, but the greatneſs of his genius ſoon made him taken notice of, ſo that making eaſy ſteps through the lower honours, he was admitted into the chair of ſtate. He acquitted himſelf in his conſulſhip ſo well, that he was the firſt who ever was honoured with the glorious title of father of his country. He was a great lover of the ſtate, and an unwearied defender thereof; Catiline's conſpiracy, and the Agrarian law are ample teſtimonies of his vigilance and induſtry. He was baniſhed the city by Clodius at that time tribune, againſt whom he made that incomparable ſpeech for Milo; but was with honour reſtored. In the civil wars he took part with Pompey, as thinking the publick liberty lay on that ſide, to which he always to his laſt breath ſhewed himſelf a conſtant friend. He had one ſon, unworthy of ſuch a father, to whom when he was a young ſtudent at Athens, he ſent his book of Offices, a book which gave the firſt handſel to the invention of Printing in Europe. He had a brother too, Quintus Cicero, once Cæſar's lieutenant general in Gaul, afterwards proconſul in Aſia. Dædalus, i. m. [à δαίω, ſcio; vel δαιδάλλω, vario, Feſt.] An Athenian artificer, the moſt ingenious in the world, whence the proverb, Dædali opera when we would commend a thing for the curiouſneſs of the work: he invented the ſaw, the ax, the plummet, the augour, glue, cement, ſails for ſhips, the ſail-yard; and ſtatues ſo contrived as to make the eyes move, as if living; being accuſed of the death of Perdix his nephew, he fled into Crete, and there made the Labyrinth, into which Minos put him and his ſon Icarus, becauſe he had made a cow of wood, wherein Paſiphae putting herſelf, became guilty of monſtrous leudneſs. He ſeeing no way of eſcape, deſired feathers and wax, to make a preſent, as he pretended, for the king, but therewith he made himſelf and his ſon wings, and ſo flew from Crete to Sardinia, and from thence to Cumæ, where having loſt his ſon by the way, he built a temple to Apollo. The meaning of the fable is, that Dædalus being privy to the adultery of Paſiphae, the wife of Minos, with his ſervant named Taurus, was caſt into priſon with his ſon Icarus; but they, and ſome other diſcontented perſons flying from Crete in ſome ſmall veſſels, Minos purſued them ſo briſkly, that the ſhip in which Icarus was, ſplit againſt the rocks: but Dædalus having found out the uſe of ſails, and the king uſing oars only, got firſt to Sicily, and ſo eſcaped the fury of his purſuer; whence the proverb, Remigiis Dædaleis, to ſignify a thing done with dexterity and ſpeed. Vid. Ov. Orpheus, i. & eos. m. A Thracian, the ſon of Oegrus, or, as others, of Apollo and Calliope; a moſt ancient, learned, and excellent poet. He was one in the Argonautic expedition, whereof he wrote the hiſtory; which, together with his hymns, &c. is ſtill extant, but whether genuine, is much doubted. They are, without doubt, of good antiquity, but ſeem to be writ by ſeveral perſons, and at different times. The poets feign the woods and hills to follow him, as charmed by his lute, and rivers to ſtop their courſe, that they might hear his muſic; the meaning whereof is, that by his wiſdom and eloquence he reduced the barbarous people to civility, as explained by Horace, A. Poet. 391. There are ſeveral others of this name found in Suidas; but Cicero, out of Ariſtotle, ſaith there never was ſuch a man as Orpheus, and that the Orphicum carmen was made by a Pythagorean, one Circops, *N. Pan, pānis. m. The god of ſhepherds, hunters, and all other country exerciſes. Mythologiſts thought the univerſal nature of things to be ſignified by him, as his name ſeemeth to import. Whoſe ſon he was, is not agreed among them. Homer maketh him the ſon of Mercury, and ſaith that he was called Pan from Πᾶν, omne, becauſe he charmed all the gods with his flute: others ſay that he was the ſon of Demogorgon, and firſt invented the organ, of ſeven unequal reeds joined together, the manner thus: Having on a time fought with Cupid, that god in ſpite made him fall in love with the coy nymph Syrinx, who fleeing from him by the banks of Ladon, a river of Arcadia, at the inſtant prayers of the nymphs was turned into a reed, as her name in Greek ſignifieth, which the god graſping inſtead of her, made a pipe of it, and for his muſic was adored by the Arcadians. The moſt common opinion was, that he was the ſon of Mercury and Penelope. But Nat. Comes, out of Duris Samius, maketh his birth ſcandalous, ſaying he was called Πᾶν, becauſe begot by all Penelope's ſuiters. He was painted half man, half goat, having large goats horns, a chaplet of pine on his red face, a pleaſant laughter, with the feet and tail of a goat, a motley ſkin covering his body, with a crooked ſtick in one hand, and his pipe in the other; ſee him nicely deſcribed by Sil. Ital. 13, 326, & ſeqq. a ſight enough to fright women and children, yea, armed men too. For when Brennus the Gaul was about to pillage the temple of Apollo at Delphos, he by night ſtruck ſuch a terror into his army, that he quitted his ſacrilegious deſign; hence Panici terrores. Yet, as homely as he was, he pleaſed the goddeſs Luna, turning himſelf eaſily into a white ram, Virg. Geor. 3, 391, & deinceps; and the nymph Dryope alſo, almoſt putting off his divinity, and turning ſhepherd for her ſake. Neither was he diſpleaſing to other nymphs, who are generally made dancing round about him, to hear the charms of his pipe. The uſual offerings made him were milk and honey, in ſhepherds wooden bowls; alſo they ſacrificed to him a dog, the wolf's enemy, whence his uſual epithet λυκαῖος, whence alſo his prieſts were called Luperci. His feſtival was celebrated Feb. 15th by the Romans, brought into Italy by Evander the Arcadian, and revived afterwards by Romulus, in memory of his preſerver. He was alſo called by the Romans Junus, ab ineundo. Vid. Liv. 1, 5. Macrob. Sat. 1, 22. & Serv. in Æn. Virg. 6, 775. The ancients, by giving ſo many adjuncts and attributes to this idol, as before hinted, ſeem to have deſigned him for the ſymbol of the univerſe; his upper parts being humane, becauſe the upper part of the world is fair, beautiful, and ſmiling, like his face; his horns ſymbolize the rays of the ſun and of the moon; his red face the ſplendor of the ſkie; the ſpotted ſkin, wherewith he is clothed, the ſtars, which beſpangle the firmament; the roughneſs of his lower parts, beaſts, and vegetables; his goats feet, the ſolidity of the earth; his pipe, compact of ſeven reeds, the ſeven planets, which they ſay make the harmony of the ſpheres; his crook, bending round at the top, the years circling in one another, Serv. interpr.

His elder brother Titan was prevailed upon to aſſign over his right to him, which he did on this condition, that Saturn ſhould deſtroy all his male children, that ſo the kingdom might return to Titan's poſterity; which Saturn performed, devouring the males as ſoon as born. But when Jupiter and Juno were born, Ops gave him a ſtone wrapt up like a child to devour, which he did; and by ſome ſuch device ſaved Neptune, and Pluto alſo. Titan hearing of this made war upon his brother, ſubdued him, and threw him into Tartarus, whence he was delivered by his ſon Jupiter. But, notwithſtanding, having learned by the oracle that his ſon ſhould dethrone him, he laid wait to kill him. But Jupiter having notice of it was beforehand with him, ſurprized him, made him drunk, bound, and gelt him, as he with his ſcythe had ſerved his father Cœlus, vid. Apoll. Arg. 974. Being looſed he fled, and hid himſelf in Italy; which from thence was called Latium, à latendo, and the people Latines, Virg. Æn. 8, 319. Janus, who reigned at that time, entertained him kindly, and gave him part of his kingdom; where he built a city called Saturnia, q. v. n. 2. In his reign the poets fix the golden age, when the earth without culture brought forth every thing. Vid. Ov. Met. 1, fab. 3. He firſt taught the rude people to plow and ſow, and invented the ſcythe, which ſome make a ſymbol of huſbandry, others take to be his attribute as the god of time.

Socrates, is. m. (1) The ſon of Sophroniſcus, a ſtone cutter of mean fortune, and Panarete a midwiſe; an Athenian philoſopher, the wiſeſt man living in his time, in the judgment of the oracle of Apollo. Quintilian calleth him the fountain, as Tully, before him, the prince of philoſophers. He was maſter to Xenophon and Plato, from whom we have an account of him; for he left nothing in writing. He taught his ſcholars gratis. He was chiefly ſtudious in Ethics, the moſt uſeful branch of philoſophy. In his advanced age he was ridiculed by Ariſtophanes, accuſed by Anytus, a rich man, Melites, a poet, and Lycon, an orator, of contemning the gods, and endeavouring to introduce a new religion, becauſe he ſaid he had a genius, with whom he adviſed in all his affairs. Whereupon he was condemned to die, and with a ſerene countenance drank up his cold poiſon, giving precepts of virtue during all the time of its operation. But after his death the Athenians ſhewed their repentance, by putting to death his accuſers; ſo true is that of the poet, Virtutem incolumem odimus, ſublatam ex oculis quærimus invidi. (2) A painter who drew the Graces at Athens; alſo Ocnus twiſting his rope, and the aſs ſtanding by to devour it. (3) An hiſtorian of Rhodes. (4) An hiſtorian of Conſtantinople, who wrote the hiſtory of the church in Greek, from the time of Conſtantine to that of Arcadius. (1) Vid. Xenoph. in Oecon. Trajānus, i. m. The fourteenth emperor of Rome, a Spaniard by birth; a man deſervedly commended for his civil and military virtues. The ſenate gave him the eulogy of OPTIMVS PRINCEPS, as his coins very obvious ſtill witneſs. So mild he was in his adminiſtration, that only one ſenator ſuffered during his reign of 19 years, and 6 months. The third perſecution of the Chriſtians indeed was raiſed in his time, but this was occaſioned by the miſrepreſentation of their enemies. For being rightly informed of their behaviour by the younger Pliny, he immediately put a ſtop to it. He died in the 9th month of the 62d year of his age, and was the only perſon buried in the city. His aſhes were depoſited in a golden urn, under a pillar of 144 feet. He left ſo great an opinion of his goodneſs, that no greater vow could be made in their acclamations by the ſenate to any ſucceeding emperor, than that he might be more fortunate than Auguſtus, more excellent than Trajan. Lege vit. ab Eutrop. ſcript.

C*UM faſti Romani non ſolum urbis olim principis orbis terrarum futuræ cunabula, mirandaque plane incrementa, civium priſcam virtutem, felicitatemque, eventa rerum memorabilia, temporum in annos, menſes, & dies, dierum in faſtos, nefaſtos, interciſos, & atros, diſtributionem, deorum nomina, & cultus ſingulares, ferias, ſacrificia, victimas, litationes, fana, delubra, aras, templa vota, ædificata, conſecrata, feſta, ludos ſolennes, epulas, ſacrorum ritus & cæremonias, februa, parentationes, juſta, & in ſumma theologiam gentium pene univerſam, nec non victorias, illuſtrium virorum in rempub. merita egregia, fortium virtutem & res geſtas, leges, ſenatus conſulta, ſcita plebis, principum & imperatorum natales, aliaque multa, quæ ad civitatem regendam ornandamque pertinebant, ſignorum item ortus & occaſus, atque hæc omnia brevibus quaſi tabellis concluſa, contineant; horum recordationem neque vobis injucundam, neque aliis cognitionem inutilem ratus, ad hoc opus meum kalendarium vetus Romanum adjeci, reverendi doctique viri anteceſſoris mei exemplum ſecutus. In hoc tamen aliam ab illo inſtiti viam: Ille formam kalendarii veteris non dedit; ego literis majuſculis, & ſcripturæ compendiis, quibus kalendaria priſca ad hanc uſque diem adſervantur in tabulis & lapidibus exſcripta, dedi: ille nudos dedit faſtos; ego notis ex antiquis ſcriptoribus, vel recentiorum commentariis, quæ ad res ipſas, vel ad rerum certos dies deſignandos pertinere videbantur, illuſtratos. Quæ quidem notæ pleræque, ingenuum enim eſt profiteri per quem profeceris, quatenus ſemeſtre Naſonis (hei nobis! quis enim ſine dolore alterius ſemeſtris damnum commemorare poteſt?) doctiſſimum opus reſpiciunt, copioſiſſimis illis eruditiſſimi viri* Car. Naſonis faſtos ſemeſtres kalendario veteri ſubjeci, quo illorum ab hoc diſcrepantia melius appareret, deinde quo tironibus ad antiquitates & hiſtoriam Romanam patentior fieret aditus, cum brevibus his notis, & doctiſſimi viri, qui locupletiſſimos Indices ad auctores claſſicos attexuit, calendario faſtibus Ovidianis præmiſſo, adjuti eſſent. Dolet, profecto quidem perdolet, faſtos hos in ſcholis minus tritos quam cæteri poetæ libri, cum ſint omnium lectu digniſſimi, omnium doctiſſimi, omnium denique utiliſſimi.

Alios dies faſtos ex kalendariis publici juris nuper factis addidiſſe licuit, ſed, unde deſumptis, cum ego neſcirem, neque illorum editores ipſi dicerent, ſuperſedi. Egone, cui in minimis credi non poſtulem, in rebus graviſſimis, quales ſunt annalium res & certa tempora, mea fide ſola, publice quicquam ut darem? peſſime certe illud libro concineret, cujus in appendiculis hoc kalendarium dedi, in quo quidem libro, ne ullum quidem vocabulum auctoritate ſua deſtitueretur, ſedulo cavi.

Cum menſium numerus Cæſareus numero deorum conſentium reſponderet, ſingulos in ſingulorum deorum tutela eſſe voluerunt Romani, quas quidem tutelas Kalendario Ruſtico notatas in cujuſque menſis capite inde exſcripſi; & cum eadem de cauſa ſigna Zodiaci eorundem tutelæ ſupponerentur, atque ortûs & occaſûs eorum in kalendariis fiat frequens mentio, tutelas illas verſibus Manilianis conſtrictas hic apponere viſum eſt.

Lanigerum Pallas, Taurum Citherea tuetur,

Atque anguſta fovet Capricorni ſidera Veſta,
E Jovis adverſo Junonis Aquarius Aſtrum eſt,
Agnoſcitque ſuos Neptunus in æquore Piſces.

Horum & aliorum ſiderum ortus & occaſus, quorum in kalendario Romano duplicem uſum mire, ut omnia, deſcribit Maro, Geor. 1, 204, ex Columella exſcripſi, cum in ſex menſibus primis a Naſone non docentur; & nonnunquam etiam ad convenientiam & diſcrepantiam inter ſe denotandam, ex Plinio. Verum Columellam præcipue ſequi viſum eſt, quoniam ille ex profeſſo aſtrologiæ ſtuduit, libróſque contra aſtrologos compoſuit.

Non eſt ut apud vos vetuſtatis peritos quicquam de faſtis dicam, aliquid tantum de eorum origine tangam, cum explicatio ex ſcriptoribus Romanis & recentiorum commentariis petenda ſit.

Numam ſecundum regem Romanorum pleraque, quæ in faſtos poſtea relata ſunt, inſtituiſſe, ſpeciatimque faſtos nefaſtoſque dies feciſſe, auctorem habemus Livium, Lib. 1, c. 19. Sed an in tabulas æneas inciſa, & in ærarium publicum condita fuerint, ante xii Tabb. confectionem, A.U.C. CCCIV, non perinde eſt certum. Poſt quem quidem annum, pontifices, quibus ſolis ex Numæ inſtituto omnia, quæ ad leges, deorumque cæremonias & cultum pertinebant, credita a principio fuerant, faſtorum tabulam occultatam penes ſe ſervabant, ſpecie quidem honoris, ſed & fortaſſe lucri, ut dies agendi peterentur a paucis, & poſſe agi necne ſcirent pauci, quoniam faſtos vulgo non habebant. Tandem A.U.C. CCCXLIX, C. Flavius Cn. F. ſcriba faſtos circa forum in albo propoſuit, ut quando lege agi poſſet, ſciretur. Hæc fere ex Cicerone pro Muræna, & Liv. lib. 9, c. ult. Sed quid vos diutius teneam? Quicquid in hoc kalendario ſit a me peccatum, ut eſt humanum, humanitati veſtræ ignoſcendum & corrigendum relinquo, plurimaſque vobis in literarum bonarum decus & profectum calendas ex animo voveo.

MEnſes Romani in calendas (vel kalendas) nonas, & idus dividebant; ordinem vero retro numerandi exhibet ſequens calendarium. Tempus etiam ſcriptis ſubſignabant hac formâ: kalendis, nonis, idibus Januariis; pridie, tertio die, quarto, &c. vel ante diem tertium, quartum, &c. kalendas, nonas, idus Januarias vel Januarii. Genitivi autem kalendarum, nonarum, iduum, pro kalendas, nonas, idus, rarò apud ſcriptores optimos occurrunt. Anno biſſextili tam diem vigeſimum quartum, quam vigeſimum quintum Februarii ſubſignabant ſexto [die ante] kalendas Martias.

Ad calendarii compendiariam ſcripturam ſequentia obſervent Tirones.

Quæ literis majuſculis ſcripta ſunt ſic notantur in kalendariis antiquis; literæ minores ad compendii explanationem pertinent. K notat Calendæ. a. d. ante vel ad diem. F. Hi dies, cum Comitia non haberentur, Faſti erant toti; tum haberentur, ſed non per totum diem, tunc ex parte Faſti. Horum numerus erat CXXCIV, qui duobus generibus ſuperioribus additi faciunt CCXIIIC. Cæteri omnes Nefaſti erant, non ita tamen ut in illis conciones habere, cauſas orare, & leges promulgare non liceret.

JANUARIUS.

A Jano antiquiſſimo Italiæ rege nomen habet, Ov. Faſt. 1, 64. Numa enim, qui ad ſolis curſum annum direxit, poſtquam duos menſes Romuli calendario addidiſſet, hunc illi honorem haberi voluit, quod Janum ſolem antiquitas crederet, vel quod Janus antiquiſſimus Italiæ rex fuiſſet. Utrunque vero menſem Martio præpoſuit, hunc, quod rebus civilibus & reip. adminiſtrandæ intentior pacem bello potiorem; illum, quod luſtrationibus & Deorum religionibus præcipue deditus, Deorum cultu nihil antiquius judicaret. Alii à Janua deductum nomen exiſtimant, quòd ſit menſium janua; ſed hoc eodem redit, cum janua ſit à Jano. Menſis tamen Tutelam Junoni olim attributam fuiſſe, ut Dearum principi, ex calendario vetere ruſtico docemur, unde & reliquorum menſium Tutelæ ſumuntur. In calendariis Romuli & Cæſaris eſt XXXI dierum, Numæ XXIX.

MARTIUS.

Hunc menſem in Romuli Calendario primas obtinere non eſt mirum; cui enim rectiùs quam Patri ſuo, Patriæque, initium anni menſiumque & Calendas ipſas conſecrare debuit? Nam, uti æquum fuit, Martem ante omnes coluiſſe priores, docet Naſo, Faſt. 2, 39. Imo vel hinc apparet in Latio tam ante quam poſt urbem conditam Martem cultum fuiſſe, quamquam non eodem menſium ordine. Martius enim in Faſtis antiquis erat Albanis, Aricinis, & Tuſculanis ordine tertius; Forenſibus & Pelignis quartus; Faliſcis & Laurentibus quintus; Hernicis ſextus; Æquicolis decimus, V. Ov. F. 3, 85, & Cenſorin. de die natali. Unde forte quis conjiciat communem Latii fuiſſe Deum, neque alia ratione Romanis proprium, quam quod Romuli pater crederetur. Primum autem à Jove honorem Marti habebant, uti ex aliis, tum ex voto Vell. Paterculi in fine operis patet.

APRILIS.

In Romuli Calendario menſis anni ſecundus, Numæ & Cæſaris quartus, dictus eſt; ut aliqui volunt, ab 'Αφρὸς ſpuma, unde 'Αφροδίτη Venus ſpumea vel marina, cui quidem opinioni favere videtur Flaccus, Carm. 4, 11, 15; quanquam notationem certiorem facilioremque ipſum Latium ſuppeditat, nempe ut Aprilis quaſi Aperilis ab aperiendo, quæ Varronis eſt ſententia, dicatur, quæ ex eo confirmari videtur, quod reliquorum menſium vocabula omnia ſunt originis Latinæ. Etſi non eſt diffitendum, Varronem L. De

MAIUS.

De hujus menſis appellatione inter veteres ſcriptores parum convenit. Tres hujus vocabuli rationes adfert Naſo, primam à Majeſtate, ſecundam à Majoribus, tertiam à Maia Mercurii matre, in principio lib. 5, quarum primam, quam ſingularem eſſe opinor, infirmiſſimam judico. Nam quæ tanta P. R. majeſtas, cum hoc nomen huic menſi primùm imponeretur? Menſium etiam nomina non dediſſe Romanos, ſed à Latinis accepiſſe arbitratur Varro, & ſpeciatim quidem hunc menſem à Tuſculanis in Faſtos Romanos tranſiiſſe quoſdam arbitratos narrat Macrob. Sat. 1, 12; cui etiam opinioni favet Feſtus, Maium menſem in compluribus civitatibus Latinis, ante urbem conditam exiſtimans. Quin & ipſe Naſo non uno loco menſium nomina Urbe antiquiora eſſe innuit, v. quæ ad Martium præfati ſumus. Poſtrema nominis cauſa Ovidio memorata, nempe Maii Vocabulum à Maia Mercurii matre ſumptum fuiſſe, eo præcipue argumento nititur, quod Maiæ his Calendis ſub nomine Bonæ Deæ dedicatum eſſet templum, & filio ſuo Idibus, qui fuit ejus natalis. His rationibus aſſenſum non negarem, niſi ſecundam nominis cauſam ab Ovidio ex Fulvii Nobilioris Faſtis, quos in templo Herculis Muſarum repoſuit, ſumptam intelligerem. Quibus quidem Faſtis illa fere continentur: "Poſtquam Romulus populum in "majores minoréſque diviſiſſet, quo altera pars armis, altera conſilio rempub. tueretur, in honorem utriuſque partis hunc "Maium, ſequentem Junium nominavit." Hic menſis quoque injuſtè nomine veteri exutus à Nerone, narrante Tacito Ann. 16, 12, 2. Claudius appellatus fuit, in honorem Claudii, ſed brevi poſt, vindiciis factis, honore nominis priſtini indutus fuit; in Tutela Apollinis erat hic menſis, & in Romuli, Numæ, & Cæſaris Calendariis xxxi dierum.

A numero loci, quem in Romuli Calendario tenuit, dictus eſt hic menſis, teſte Varrone, qui omnes menſes à Junio ad Decembrem uſque à numero appellatos ſcribit, L. L. 5. Plures imperatores poſt datum S. C. Julio & Auguſto Cæſaribus Quintilis & Sextilis de ſuis Nominibus appellationis honorem proximi menſis hujus mirè ambiebant vocabulum. Ti. quidem Cæſar, quod unum ſaltem in honorem cedit, à ſenatu oblatum modeſtè recuſavit, Suet. in vita, cap. 26. Domitianus cum jam adulatione temporum Faſti fœdati fuerunt, uti diſcimus ex Tacito, Hiſt. 4, 40, 3, ex titulo Germanici ambitioſè aſſumpto Germanicum, Macrob. Sat. 1, 12, appellari voluit, qua quidem menſis appellatione fœdiſſimè illi adblanditur Mart. Epig. 9, 2. Sed infauſto hoc vocabulo ſtatim à morte ejus ex omni ære & lapide eraſo antiquum menſis nomen recepit. Commodus deinde ex titulo ſuo Herculem appellari juſſit, quod ipſe pro Hercule Romano, uti docent monumenta, & nummi paſſim obvii, ſe venditabat; cum ſciret paulo ante Antoninum Pium tam ſibi quam conjugi Fauſtinæ ab hoc honore temperâſſe: Decretum enim fuerat à ſenatu, ut Septembris Antoninus, Octobris Fauſtinus appellaretur. Tacitus denique honoris hujus avidiſſimus, quod hoc menſe tam natus quam factus Imperator fuerat, appellationem menſis hujus ad ſe rapuit, Vopiſc. in vita, ſed brevi admodum retinuit; atque ita priſtinum menſi ſervatum eſt nomen, quod etiamnum manet. Septembris in tutela Vulcani poſitus eſt, & in Calendario Numæ eſt dierum xxix, Romuli & Cæſaris xxx.

OF THE ROMAN COINS, WEIGHTS, and MEASURES.

THE Romans reckoned their money by æs, aſſes, ſeſtertii or nummi, denarii, ſolidi or aurei, pondo or libra.

Æs, as it denoted a particular coin, was at firſt libralis, or of a pound weight, and even when it was diminiſhed, retained the name of libella. The firſt impreſs of this coin was a Janus, and on the reverſe the roſtrum of a ſhip.

As was divided into twelve parts, the names of whoſe diviſions were theſe following: uncia, ſextans, quadrans, triens, quincunx, ſemis, ſeptunx, bes, dodrans, dextans, dejunx.

Quadrans and Teruncius are uſed to ſignify the ſmalleſt braſs coin after the reduction of the as, as the ſeſtertius was the leaſt of the ſilver coins.

The as was firſt reduced to two ounces, then to one ounce, and at laſt to half an ounce.

The ſeſtertius was a ſilver coin, equal to the fourth part of a denarius.

Nummus, when mentioned as a piece of money, was the ſame with the ſeſtertius. So mille nummi, mille ſeſtertii, and mille ſeſtertii nummi ſignify the ſame; as do likewiſe mille nummûm, mille ſeſtertiûm, and mille ſeſtertiûm nummûm.

Seſtertium in the neutral gender ſignifies mille ſeſtertiûm nummorum.

The marks of the ſeſtertius nummus are IIS. LLS. HS. H-S. which characters denote 2½ aſſes.

In ſpeaking of ſums above a thouſand, there is often a twofold eclipſis, ſometimes of the word ſeſtertium, or its mark, ſometimes of the word mille; as in Martial, vi, 10. Pauca Jovem nuper cum millia (ſerſtitia) forte rogarem; and vii, 9. Septingenta (millia) Tito debet Lupus. There is another double eclipſis to be obſerved when they uſe the numeral Adverbs; as HS. bis & tricies in annos ſingulos Verri decernebatur, quod aratoribus ſolveret, Cic. Verr. iii, 70. where centena millia is underſtood, ſcil. 3,200,000 nummi ſeſtertii, or 3,200 ſeſtertia. If the ſum is to be reduced to nummi ſeſtertii, then centum and mille both are underſtood, and that decies or 10 muſt be multiplied by 100,000. If you would reduce the ſum to ſeſtertia, the word centum being then underſtood, it muſt be multiplied only by 100. Thus decies HS. is 1,000,000 nummi ſeſtertii, or 1000 ſeſtertia.

Mille ſeſtertii is only 1000 nummi ſeſtertii, in Engliſh money 8 l. 1 s. 5 d. ½, which makes a ſeſtertium.

Mille ſeſtertia is 1000 times that ſum, viz. 8072 l. 18 s. 4 d.

Millies HS. is 100,000 times that ſum, or 807,291 l. 13 s. 4 d.

When the numbers have a line over them, centena millia is underſtood, as in the caſe of the numeral Adverbs; thus HS. $\overline{\text{MC}}$. ſignifies the ſame with millies centies HS. that is 110,000,000 nummi, or 888,020 l. 16 s. 8 d. whereas HS. MC. without the croſs lines denote only 1100 nummi, or 8 l. 17 s. 7 d. ¼.

When the numbers are diſtinguiſhed by points in two or three different orders, the firſt towards the right hand ſignifies units, the ſecond thouſands, and the third hundred thouſands; for inſtance, III. XII. DC. HS. denotes 300,000, 12000, and 600 HS. in all making 312,600 nummi, in Engliſh money 5047 l. 3 s. 9 d.

Denarius was the chief ſilver coin among the Romans; in weight, at firſt, the ſeventh part of a Roman ounce, which, according to Dr. Arbuthnot, conſiſted of 438 grains, and was equal to our Averdupoiſe ounce; upon which calculation an ounce of ſilver of that number of grains would be in value 4 s. 6 d. ¼.

The ſubdiviſions of the denarius were the quinarius, or half, ſo called from its value of five aſſes; and likewiſe victoriatus, from the image of Victory ſometimes impreſſed upon it; and the ſeſtertius, which has been mentioned already.

The pondo argenti amongſt the Romans is a ſort of numeral expreſſion of ſums of money, and is different from the common libra, which conſiſted only of 84 denarii, or 96 drachms. The pondo, according to Budæus's valuation, amounts to the value of an Attic Mina, or 3 l. 4 s. 7 d. according to Agricola, to 3 l. 2 s.

There were ſometimes alſo coined of braſs the triens, ſextans, uncia, ſextula, and dupondius.

The Roman gold coin was the aureus, which weighed generally double the denarius: which, according to the firſt proportion of coinage mentioned by Pliny, Lib. xxxiii, 3, was worth	1	4	3 ¾

Some alterations of the value of the Roman coin mentioned by Pliny:

In the reign of Servius } the as weighed of braſs } 1 pound.
A. Urb. 490 } the as weighed of braſs } 2 ounces.

Multiply by the Number of Roman feet in a Roman pace — 5 is the Number of English feet in a

4835. in a Roman Mile

Note, Thoſe who do not underſtand decimal fractions, may obſerve that the denominator of every ſuch decimal is an unit with as many cyphers as there are places of numbers in the fraction; that the decimal parts are ſeparated from the integer by a comma, and that the firſt figure, or two firſt figures in the decimal parts, are chiefly to be regarded, without conſidering the number of places; 5 is half, 25 a quarter; as in pes 11,604 which is 11 inches, and 604 decimal parts of an inch, and very little more than half an inch; had it been 500, it had been juſt half, or if 250, juſt a quarter of an inch.

The Grecian ~~Stadium~~ Mi contained 600 feet = 24 Roman but as the Grecian foot = 12.087
The Roman Stadium contained 625 feet = 25 & the Roman foot = 11.604
according to this proportion the Grecian & Roman Miles contained ~~[illegible]~~ an equal number of English feet as did the Stadium of each Measure feet: In: dec 4. 4.5 English
